One day last week, I was reading a book and listening to the radio. I was enjoying some great classical music when suddenly, I heard an announcement. There was a huge thunderstorm coming our way! I hurried to close the windows, and called my sister Tami, who was riding her bike to volleyball practice. I told her about the storm, and she asked if our dad was driving home from work and could pick her up. So, I quickly called him to see if he could find Tami before the storm came. He'd left work already and was on his way home, so he said he'd pick her up in about five minutes. Once Tami was in the car with her bike in the back and they were driving home together, the storm hit. There was a lot of rain, thunder, and lightning—I was so glad they were safely on their way home.

When Omar was in high school, he studied math, physics, chemistry and biology. In his last year, he got an opportunity to take a class at a local college. He was studying all the time, taking tests for his regular classes and at the college! Omar had always enjoyed biology and chemistry in school and wanted to learn more about biochemistry. He'd talked to some of his friends who had done courses at the college while they were still at school, and they all said that they'd learned a lot and had enjoyed it. Omar had been a little worried that his schedule might be too full, but he didn't really mind because he loved the college classes—they were so interesting and the professors were amazing. Omar especially loved being able to use the college library, and did all his homework there. He'd told so many of his friends about his great experience that they all wanted to take classes at the college, too.

Camila grew up in a small town. Her family had lived there for many years. She loved walking to school with her sisters and cousins, and stopping by her grandparents' house on the way home. When she was in high school, her aunt asked Camila what she wanted to do in the future. Camila said, "I'm going to go to college. I'll probably study biology. I might have to do more training, but then I'm going to be a doctor." Her aunt replied, "That sounds great, Camila! You may have to work very hard if that's your ambition. I wanted to be a doctor when I was younger, but I didn't have enough money for college. I had to work after school. I'm sure you will do well if you study a lot and ask for help when you need it."

It is the most amazing experience, beyond most other things I've experienced in life. I literally have the freedom to move in 360 degrees of space and an ecstatic experience of joy and freedom. And the incredibly unexpected thing is that other people seem to see and feel that too. Their eyes literally light up, and they say things like, "I want one of those," or, "If you can do that, I can do anything." And I'm thinking, it's because in that moment of them seeing an object they have no frame of reference for, or so transcends the frames of reference they have with the wheelchair, they have to think in a completely new way. And I think that moment of completely new thought perhaps creates a freedom that spreads to the rest of other people's lives. For me, this means that they're seeing the value of difference, the joy it brings when, instead of focusing on loss or limitation, we see and discover the power and joy of seeing the world from exciting new perspectives.

In 1526, explorer Hernán Cortés recorded tales of fabulously rich towns hidden in the Honduran interior. He must have heard similar stories from a variety of people. If early explorers hadn't heard stories of a ruined city rising above the jungle, archaeologist Chris Fisher might not have flown to the mountains of La Mosquitia in early 2015 to look for the ruins of a lost city. Fisher did not believe in the legends of "Ciudad Blanca"—a mythical city built of white stone. He thought it couldn't have existed.

Though the Mosquitia are among the most mysterious of ancient cultures in the Americas, Fisher did believe the mountains of La Mosquitia must contain the ruins of a real lost city, which had been abandoned for at least 500 years. When archaeologists first began to explore Mosquitia in the 1930s, they uncovered some settlements. They thought the area may once have been occupied by a widespread, sophisticated culture. Some archaeologists have proposed that a group of Maya warriors may have taken control of Mosquitia. Others think that the local culture could have simply embraced the characteristics of the Maya. There is no evidence yet that the Mosquitia built with stone. When their buildings were decorated and painted, they may have been as remarkable as some of the great temples of the Maya. But once abandoned, they dissolved in the rain and rotted away. If the Mosquitia had built their buildings of stone, we might know more about them.

1 I might not have met my best friend if we had gone to different schools.
2 If I hadn't found my passport, I wouldn't have been able to fly home last week.
3 Shana must have eaten all the candy.
4 You shouldn't have streamed all that music.
5 He must have done well on his test.
6 I shouldn't have cut my hair.
7 The river would be lower if it hadn't rained so much last week.
