Better writing outcomes

Learner Training 4 Worksheet

There are two different ways to practise your writing. The first is to write stories, emails or conversations that use new language you've learnt. This will help you remember what you've studied. The second way is to write emails, letters, essays, etc. for particular purposes. To do this, you need to study examples of the kinds of writing you want to do, and see how grammar and vocabulary work in them. You can then write similar pieces yourself, using what you've learnt.

- Each level of Outcomes contains eight two-page lessons on different kinds of writing. You will learn how to write for social, professional and academic purposes.
- In each lesson, try to re-use some of the language you study. This will help you write more fluently.
- You can also write stories or conversations after you finish each unit in this book. If you do this, use as much new language from the unit as possible.
- If possible, ask your teacher to check and correct any writing you do. Keep a note of any common mistakes.

1 Work in groups of three. Discuss how you feel about writing in your own language and in English, what difficulties you have, what kinds of things you write, etc.

2 Read about the two ways of practising your writing above. In your groups, discuss what you think of the two methods. Have you tried both? Which do you find more useful? Which do you think are a good idea?

3 Think of one more strategy to help with your writing.
