READING

Lucky László

Homeless and unemployed, László Andraschek was on his way to attend a workshop for recovering alcoholics in Budapest when he decided to buy a lottery ticket at a railway station shop. He picked six numbers at random, and handed over the list to the shop assistant, who handed it back, reminding him that he had to choose seven numbers, not six. Feeling irritated, and wishing that he hadn't bothered to stop and waste his money, Andraschek selected one more number – the number 24. He headed onwards, towards Budapest, his ticket in his pocket, but all thoughts that he might win anything were far from his mind.

A few months later, a large donation was made to a hostel for the homeless in Hungary, and journalists were quick to track down the man responsible for such a generous gift. Against all odds, Andraschek's lottery ticket had contained the luckiest of numbers, and he had won over two million euros. In one of the most sudden rags to riches stories in history, Andraschek had been transformed overnight from being penniless to being fabulously wealthy. To his credit, however, he hadn't forgotten his previous struggles, hence the generous gift to the hostel.

When interviewed, the 55-year-old seemed to still be in shock that he had been so lucky. He revealed that he had spent some of the money on himself and his family, but hadn't really been sure what to buy. As well as buying flats for his three children, he had bought a luxury car. However, as neither he nor his wife had passed their driving test, he had given the car to his children, all of whom had licences. He announced that he was planning a trip to Italy, a country he had always dreamed of visiting, but he still hadn't got round to applying for a passport, something he had never previously possessed.

Having struggled with alcoholism, Andraschek finally gave up drinking five years ago, and now says that he has no excuse for returning to his former habit. He hopes to help others with similar problems by using a part of his winnings to establish a foundation for addicts and for women who have been the victims of domestic abuse.

News of Andraschek's remarkable story has focused attention on the plight of homeless people in Hungary, a country where 30,000 people sleep rough each night. In a bid to clean up the streets, authorities have recently passed a law banning sleeping on the streets, a law which many consider unfair. Activists argue that it is punishing people with nowhere else to go, subjecting them to fines or imprisonment, rather than finding a long-term solution to the problem. Perhaps Andraschek's story will provide hope for people down on their luck, and his generosity will provide some support for those in need.
