COMMON SAYINGS

when the going gets tough, the tough get going:

if you say when the going gets tough, the tough get going, you mean that in a difficult situation, strong people work hard in order to succeed

I couldn't believe how determined he was, but as the saying goes, when the going gets tough, the tough get going people in glass houses shouldn't throw stones:

glass is a material that easily breaks, so if you throw stones in a glass house, you will damage your own environment. People in glass houses shouldn't throw stones is a saying that means that it is not sensible to make criticisms of other people if you have the same faults that you are criticising in them

I was going to say that he'd got a bit fat, then looked in a mirror and thought people in glass houses shouldn't throw stones

when in Rome (, do as the Romans do):

you say when in Rome, or when in Rome, do as the Romans do, to justify doing something that you would not normally do, because you are in a different place from usual and it is acceptable to the people and culture where you now are

'I thought you were a vegetarian!' – 'When in Rome, as they say. This is the best steak you can get in America'

if you can't beat them (, join them):

if you can't beat them (, join them) is a saying that means you might as well do what everyone else is doing even though you don't like it or disapprove of it, because you have tried doing something else but have not succeeded in it

I've never enjoyed sunbathing, but if you can't beat them ...

it takes all sorts (to make a world):

it takes all sorts (to make a world) is a saying that means that you think someone is behaving in a strange way but that you have to accept it because people are all different from each other he's volunteered to work over the weekend again – well, it takes all sorts the early bird catches the worm:

the early bird catches the worm is a saying that means you are likely to be successful if you start an activity before other people he used to start work at 7 hoping to be the early bird that catches the worm never look a gift horse in the mouth:

people used to look in a horse's mouth to see if it was healthy and fit. If you tell someone not to look a gift horse in the mouth, you mean they shouldn't try and find a fault in something that they got for free never one to look a gift horse in the mouth, I thanked my aunt and put the vase on the dining table

if it ain't broke, don't fix it:

if it ain't broke, don't fix it is a saying that means that you should not try and make changes to something that already works properly. The saying deliberately uses informal and ungrammatical English. If it ain't broke means if it isn't broken

I can't get this door handle back to how it was – just goes to show that if it ain't broke, don't fix it too many cooks (spoil the broth):

broth is a kind of soup. Too many cooks (spoil the broth) is a saying that means if too many people become involved in an activity it will not succeed because everyone will get in other people's way.

lunch was a disaster – it was literally a case of too many cooks

(every cloud has) a silver lining:

(every cloud has) a silver lining is a saying that means that there is usually something good in a situation even if the situation seems bad or unpleasant every cloud has a silver lining, and when it rained all weekend I was able to finish reading War and Peace

the grass is always greener (on the other side):

the grass is always greener (on the other side) is a saying that means that people have a habit of thinking that things are better for other people or in other places after a week in the marketing department I realised that the grass wasn't actually greener on the other side and went back to my old job don't count your chickens (before they are hatched):

if you don't count your chickens (before they are hatched), you don't make plans that depend on something before it is certain that it will be successful. The image is of counting eggs and imagining that you will have a lot of chickens when in fact some of the eggs might not hatch (give birth to live chickens)

don't count your chickens – you haven't had the exam results yet
